Lift the Public Plan

The economic stimulus programs by the present administration in Washington, DC do not have the capacity to kickstart a stagnant or declining economy. Therefore, we would like to offer a plan that does have the capacity to ease this financial and impending social crisis, and to turn our economy around to the point of a global renaissance.

Our economic stimulus plan works in conjunction with another plan that we are introducing—the Conflict Resolution Plan—which will create a sense of mediation with the countries now at war. It will create an opportunity to cut the funds for the war. There is no need to continue waging a war no one can win, a war that can be terminated in such a way that all sides come out ahead. The effects of the war on the U.S. economy must be addressed. This is the first of several plans we are introducing to create the global renaissance.

Our plans for world peace involve the creation of an international government based on fair and equitable practices. Disputes between nations will be resolved through third party arbitration, and on an economic basis by creating win-win agreements overseen by the international government's departments. This allows the federal government to function on less taxes, and the monies can stay within the United States to allow the people to prosper.

At the present time, to keep costs to consumers lower, corporations have out-sourced jobs to other countries and have gone offshore to incorporate. The ultimate conclusion is that other countries are prospering and the people of the United States aren't. This plan brings businesses back to the United States.

By lowering taxes, the government makes it easier for small businesses and organizations to be created. During hard economic times, people draw on their talents and gifts to come up with new ideas so they can get their life on a higher level. Innovative ideas can be in any field, including technology and social programs. During the Depression era, there were many new patents by inventors working out of their garage. Consider what Bill Gates and Steve Jobs accomplished by working out of their garage. By allowing the private sector to expand, the people with the expertise can afford to start small programs, each coming from his or her own area of expertise. This will close the drain of intellectual property to China. Under the Lift the Public plan, consumers have the option of lower prices or to pay slightly higher costs—lower than the present costs—to encourage the creation of small businesses or organizations to offer them more choices in the marketplace, and can assuage their fears of a global depression.

The Plan

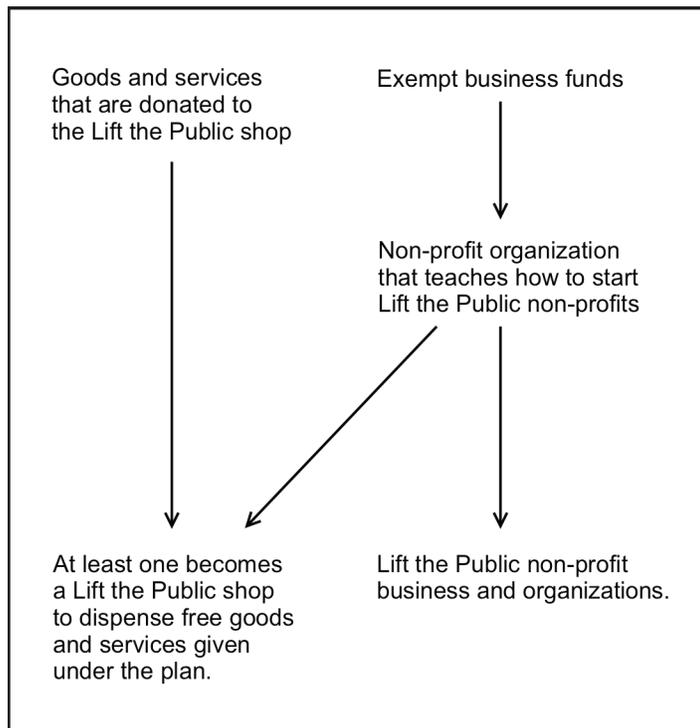

We would like to start the Lift the Public plan in Brookings by requesting that our town become a test case for the plan. We request that the IRS allows Brookings/Harbor businesses to become eligible for tax exemption under the 501(c)3 section of the IRS tax code under a new category called, "Lift the Public," and that Congress address the other changes necessary to create this plan.

1. Any business can participate and become tax exempt.
2. Customers can choose to pay as a regular business transaction, which will be taxable income.
3. Proceeds from the Lift the Public plan must go to start non-profits that offer the Lift the Public option.

Businesses can choose to direct products or services to a Lift the Public shop or to apply the funds to an organization that assists in the process to start other businesses based on this plan. Complaints against a Lift the Public business for regularly offering poor quality products to the shop can be filed with the IRS, and the business's tax exempt status can be revoked.

Lift the Public shops also have a 501(c)3 status in a separate category, or section, and must comply with regulations, or felony charges will apply. Products and services must be available free, with no strings attached. The shop can accept donations to cover expenses, and to pay a wage to the coordinator, set at the average cost of living level for that community.

A retail/commercial property owner can offer free space to the Lift the Public store in exchange for a discount on his or her taxes. For example, if there are 10 shops in the complex, all with Lift the Public status, he gets a 50% tax exemption if he offers free space to the shop.

Implementation of the Plan

If the U.S. government agrees to consider Brookings as a model of this plan, our organization will start the stimulus plan with a one-time class for children, ages 14-20, teaching them the basics of the Lift the Public plan.

The children will be taught the principles of the global renaissance in a series of classes, and then how to apply the principles to create projects based on our innovative technologies. This is just one of the plans, and one of the children will assume responsibility for carrying the idea forward. Then, they will all become teachers of the plan.

Children make wonderful teachers to their parents because they are used to working on projects. The parents will see the potential of the plan. If children can make it happen, why not the parents? This will work with other people, also, because many people during hard times feel victimized or traumatized by events, and the demonstration by the children that it is possible to get your life on a higher level by working within the framework allows them to see the potential. The global renaissance implies everyone can get their life on a higher level.

To carry the idea for the plan out into the public, we will offer business owners in town the opportunity to participate in the program by introducing it through newspaper ads and articles, asking them to stop at our booth at the Azalea Festival this May. It will function something like a Girl Scout selling cookies. The children can explain how the program works as people stop and shop at our booth.

Our organization is the first business that will function as a Lift the Public non-profit. Our initial product offered for sale for two prices will be a book called, "The Principles of the Global Renaissance," offered during the festival. The "Lift the Public" price will be $1.00 more. The books offers the understanding that a global renaissance is possible, and is actually quite simple to achieve.

Our organization will work to establish Lift the Public plans in all 50 states in our tent tour project, which will start shortly, and also in our online store. We will offer a range of prices, and in our catalog, explain how the plan works. This will allow businesses and individuals to understand the process, and allow it to spread across the country.

We will work in conjunction with H.E.A.R.T (Homeless Empowerment and Resources for Transition). HEART is a new non-profit organization offering help to people who are homeless. That organization will function as a Lift the Public shop. The money will also go to an adult who is willing to teach people how to start, based on this plan, and transition existing businesses, by first working with the children and then taking the idea to the adult level, as the children go on to learn the other principles of the global renaissance and start new projects.
